On the first part, I mean the first part of the trailer. For the second part, that is the trailer I'll upload later on. Already installed SteamVR to track the controllers. First one where I was using the right stick to control the aiming. For the second part, I was playing with the Y axis only to indicate which buttons I'm pushing. I'm currently playing through the arcade portion of the game. I hope you'll enjoy it. This game is currently in testing, the release may be some days later than the first video. For now I'm heading home, I'll upload the second part tomorrow, I hope you'll follow me! For the second part, I was playing with the Y axis only to indicate which buttons I'm 30-year-old Inspector Sherlock Holmes "Sherlock Holmes - Armored Combat" and, as he himself calls her, "The Great Ladykiller" is legendary detective, combining his physical, intellectual and spiritual characteristics and personal skills to win the war against criminals. After combining with women's love and passion for fighting, he created a brilliant female detective. She has never turned on their love, always acting in accordance with their motto: "The world looks differently at night". As one of his most famous detectives, she has always been on the job. That was always several basic points: the smart eye, quick thinking, energetic, happy to see a smile on the face of any suspects. In addition, she has a great sense of humor and is in great shape! Special abilities:

light on the body, fast movements, considerable endurance and a keen sense of smell, she is highly attentive to how much to look suspicious on the face of suspects, she learns quickly how to handle a variety of firearms and knives with precision. The game is presented as an original puzzle. At the same time, the story of the game, which is very close to the "Sherlock" series, will drive you to action. You will take part in a wide variety of shooting scenes. Game will follow the project, crime will be resolved every step of the way, from the crime scene to its own investigation, and the whole process from the arrest to the judgment. The entire game is a detective's investigation, the observer of the scene and the initiator of action, which requires extreme accuracy of the player and his reaction time. "Game "Sherlock Holmes - Armored Combat" is an original puzzle, as the story unfolds, the player will have to complete his character "Sherlock Holmes", which, as you see, is not a problem. It is designed as a three-dimensional photo - game, but this is your clear task in the game - moving in time and space, on the field of the game, you, the player, will perform more than one hundred scenes. You will follow the capture of the criminal, put together the puzzle of all information about the crime, investigate the case and, if necessary, put it to trial, and then decide to initiate the action: shoot someone or not? In order to effectively achieve the three goals, the player will be provided with a variety of crime scenes, in which the player's character can be located by different methods and set a condition to "unlock"

railway station Burnhouse Lane railway station (also known as Burnhouse Lane-Weybridge Junction) served the then village of Burnhouse, now part of South Weybridge, in the county of Surrey, England. The station was west of London on the North & East London Line, but was located at the junction of two lines to the north; and the main line to Waterloo and southwards and the line heading towards Alton. The station had numerous sidings. History Burnhouse Lane was opened by the North and East London Railway (N&ELR) in 1869. Although London Underground operated the North London Line, via Weybridge to Waterloo, until 1963, the journey was made by train from Waterloo West. Contemporary diagram The N&ELR worked at their own time slots and the Cumberland Row loop at South Weybridge (the old station) now became the passing loop. The old station closed on 15 December 1915. Service levels went from hourly between South Weybridge and Waterloo in the morning to four trains a day each way between Waterloo and South Weybridge in the evening. Later, London Underground discontinued Waterloo service on certain trains on evenings and Sundays. These trains then terminated at Elephant & Castle, or ran through from Elephant & Castle to Aldgate and then back via Broad Street to London Bridge via Cannon Street and Charing Cross. The modified service pattern and the lack of clarity about which services were operated under what section meant that confusion at the N&ELR station at South Weybridge was common. Train marshals, often second or third class passengers, demanded to know if a service was working via Elephant & Castle or Cannon Street. In 1912, the N&ELR passenger facilities at Cumberland Row were improved. This was to forestall Union Castle Line services to and from London Euston ending their calls at Weybridge. The route worked via Benson Road to Twickenham and then onto Crystal Palace before heading to Stratford High Street and diverting towards Elephant and Castle, via Kensal Green and Herne Hill. The former SR route passed Burnhouse Lane. The N&ELR would end the service there and passengers would change onto the Underground. When the East London Railway (ELL) bought the N&ELR in 1923 it brought the new ELL service to Burnhouse Lane and the existing service was incorporated into the permanent ELL service. The 1923 grouping of railway companies led to major changes in British
