Level: GREAT Story: So I would call this one a "TV horror game with VR". Its pretty basic stuff though (except the puzzle). My main problem with the game is the kind of story that it tries to tell. The game takes place on Halloween night and that means, creepy clowns, witches, a haunted house, etc. However, in order to tell the story it tries to tell it also includes costumes, food, tools, plants. All of this is so... random and it does not feel like a scary Halloween night at all. Also, the level design is not very good. The levels are the first parts of the house, in the hallway and around the rooms. However, the level designer really didn't understand how to make the houses feel creepy. So the level designer did not use the little details (like the paintings on the wall) to make the houses feel creepy at all. (...) Overall this is a cool app but if you are trying to see "creepy Halloween night" it really isn't that. Also, in order to play as a ghost you have to go into the house and do something to the ghosts. By the time I figured out what the ghosts wanted, the app had ended (!) Gameplay: I was trying to do the ghost story thing and the app failed and I got sucked into puzzles. The puzzles aren't that great (I think there are 3 or 4) but they do make sense and it does put you in a different world. The puzzles in the game are very strange and unusual and at times you are forced to think outside the box. Overall, its a cool app. Great graphics, the atmosphere is very creepy and disturbing. Overall, this is a weird little app, mostly pointless, but not bad at all Gameplay: Probably the best aspect of this game for me, by far, was the lack of jump scares (...). The guys over at Gexagon really know how to draw you into the horror without resorting to cheap tricks and gore. Overall, this is a cool app, but I would probably check out the team's other games before buying it. Level: GREAT Story: Its a simple story. Pick a path and just walk around. However, the point of the story is to help the story and it works. The environments are well designed and feel eerie. The time of the story is still a mystery though. Theres some weird stuff

What's new:

In recent decades, there has been an emerging shift to the Southwestern United States as the epicenter of the baby boomer population change. Between 1970 and 2015, the region experienced population growth of almost 100 percent. By 2015, the Old West States (Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Nevada), together with the Southwest, had the highest total amount of population growth, and had more than accounted for the majority of the increase in the population over the study period. As the baby boomers continue to grow, with about one in five people living to age 95 years or older, and until just 20 years ago the state with the most persons in this age cohort was Illinois, today Arizona is on top of the list of states with a greater proportion of older adults. In a report from the Knight Foundation in 2015, more than 40 percent of the total population in Arizona was 65 years or older, and that percentage was expected to grow to more than 50 percent by 2025 and more than 60 percent by 2040. With new baby boomers as adults and the use of community living centers to accommodate them, this state is increasingly becoming a retirement destination. In 2015, projections indicate that the population over the age of 65 will more than double in less than 50 years. Frankenstrom will have to consider a number of important policy decisions, and it is important for us to predict the likely effects of a policy response to the issues as they emerge. First and foremost, his initial reaction must be to provide assurance to the current baby boomers and near-retirees in the state that they will have a secure retirement. We consider that to be critical if communities intend to continue growing and attracting new generations of younger people. How do we facilitate a secure retirement for all by ensuring that there is a substantial and secure pension program? How do we make the best use of our financial resources for seniors and more importantly people on welfare? How do we develop a more workable school system and a closer connection with early childhood education? For these groups, what might be called “behaviors” are essentially living requirements, which they have had to do for years because they have not had an alternative for the jobs that they have done in the past. How do we foster and maintain our competitive advantage as a new economy with new technology and new jobs? What is the political and social landscape that will follow the process of retirement? From an informational standpoint, what areas of knowledge should we focus on that are most appropriate to support

Hunger in Los Angeles is an immersive journalistic experience set in the heart of the city, where the indigent are trying to survive on an over-strained food distribution system. By embedding audio that was captured from the First Unitarian Church in an immersive 3D Unity scene, we become witness to a distressing event that unfolds. Though Hunger is a radio story, it is told with the same immersive style as the Sundance short film we are based on. Unity is only a tool, not a medium. Hunger is a story of the people who struggle in a city where power is never so evident than when someone is left without access to the essentials of life. Story: The Hunger Project is a nonprofit organization that connects volunteer writers from around the world with communities in need, seeking to create and deliver new kinds of journalism in the places where our world is most at risk of being broken. We use what we learn from our writing to develop creative social change strategies, a new kind of digital storytelling, and a new model of cross-cultural collaboration. Our goal is to tell their stories, tell them well, and enable them to tell their own.
