This document contains a complete list of Unicode characters in the Latin script (i.e., those with assigned "Code-Point") that are contained in a release from the Unicode Consortium that covers the area to which this document applies. Characters contained in releases after this version are described in subsequent documents. This document applies to releases of versions 2.0 and 3.0 of Unicode, including those that may be released between the current release and versions 2.0 or 3.0. For more information about a particular character in a particular version of Unicode, check the Platform for that version. This document defines the normalization form of each character in the Latin script. In some cases, this document uses more than one name for the normalization form, in accordance with the Unicode standard, and in other cases, the more general name is used. For example, under certain definitions, unaccented diacritics may be called "smooth", as well as "non-spacing". In the latter case, with certain exceptions, the general name "smooth" is used. The normalization form used here is called "NFC", short for "normalization form compact". With this definition, characters that have identical canonically equivalent representations are encoded in one form, as are characters with similar but not identical representations, as long as the character for the latter is in the range of characters with the former. Characters that have canonical equivalent representations under other definitions are encoded using the latter form, and characters for which there are no canonically equivalent representations are encoded using the canonical equivalent of their basic Latin-script representation. Character data processed in other international languages that would otherwise have the same equivalence may not be encoded as NFC. Furthermore, some values not in the NFC set are encoded in this set. Where there is no wider equivalence, characters encoded using the NFC set are preferred when the same sequence of characters occur repeatedly. This list does not contain all the characters in the Latin script; for complete lists, consult the "Characters by Script" page at the Unicode website. The following abbreviations are used throughout this document: NFC: "normalization form compact" (BMP): "basic Latin script" Diacritics: (accent): Accent mark(s) (accent): Mark of no accent. (dieresis): (Period). (grave): Grave accent
