I have a site running on Apache2 on a VPS, and I would like to be able to serve some of my content from another domain. I know I can do this using Apache's mod_rewrite, and that's what I've been using so far. The problem is I don't know how to make Apache serve pages from a different domain. For example, I have a site named userfriends.com, and I'd like Apache to serve some content like this from a subdomain site like friends-user.userfriends.com (I realize the URL needs to be fixed to be friendssusername.userfriends.com, etc, but I'm simplifying the example). So, for example, suppose that I have these files:

How do I configure Apache2 so that if someone tries to access this domain and go to they can get the html page content, but if they go to they'll get an error page indicating the page doesn't exist? Basically, I'd like to be able to run Apache on the host and serve content from a different domain using the same software. If I'm going to be using an external application to render these pages, that would be the second part of the question. A: You can redirect user to another domain's root using this code: RewriteEngine On # IF HTTP REQUEST IS FOR A FOLDER IN A D 6d1f23a050
